CENSUS 2020: GET BROOKLYN COUNTED!

Census 2020 is just around the corner. It is important to remember that census data directly affects how the federal government allocates more than $675 billion every year to communities for programs and services. Your response matters to help get the necessary services needed in Brooklyn, in New York City, in New York State. Health clinics. Fire departments. Schools. Roads and highways. Education. The census shapes many different aspects of our community. Census results help determine how billions of dollars in federal funding flow into states and communities each year. The results also determine how many seats in Congress each state gets.

Afraid that your response might put you in legal trouble? Your privacy matters. Every census employee takes an oath to protect your personal information for life. When you respond to the census, your answers are kept anonymous. They are used only to produce statistics. The U.S. Census Bureau is bound by law to protect your answers and keep them strictly confidential. The law ensures that your private information is never published and that your answers cannot be used against you by any government agency or court.

Still not convinced? Your help matters. Getting a complete and accurate count in 2020 requires everyone’s help. There are many ways for individuals, businesses, community organizations, and others to play a part. Think about this statistic: Census data controls funding for Title 1, special education, school lunches, after school programs, Head Start, and more. A kindergartner not counted in the 2020 Census this spring will be in high school when the next census begins in 2030. Some children were missed in the 2010 Census. Uncounted children can result in missed resources for ten years. School lunch programs are based on the perceived number of students in need. Those children that were not counted still require resources, and it is our responsibility to ensure that as many resources are received as possible.

Census 2020 is recruiting thousands of people across the country to assist with the 2020 Census. Earn extra income while helping your community. For more information and to apply, visit https://2020census.gov.

WOMEN’S HEART HEALTH

Do you know what causes cardiovascular disease in women? What about the survival rate? Or whether women of all ethnicities share the same risk? The unfortunate fact is that cardiovascular disease is the No. 1 killer of women, causing 1 in 3 deaths each year. Unfortunately, most women do not realize just how common heart disease is for them, and neither does the health industry, which still touts heart disease as a predominately male illness.

Heart disease does not affect all women alike, and the warning signs for women aren’t the same in men. There are several misconceptions about heart disease in women, and they could be putting you at risk. The American Heart Association’s Go Red For Women movement advocates for more research and swifter action for women’s heart health for this very reason. Fortunately, by learning their unique heart disease symptoms, women can begin to reduce their risks.

Heart attack symptoms for women

The most common heart attack symptom in women is the same as in men – some type of chest pain, pressure or discomfort that lasts more than a few minutes or comes and goes. But chest pain is not always severe or even the most noticeable symptom, particularly in women. Women often describe it as pressure or tightness. And, it’s possible to have a heart attack without chest pain.

Women are more likely than men to have heart attack symptoms unrelated to chest pain, such as:

- Neck, jaw, shoulder, upper back or abdominal discomfort
- Shortness of breath
- Pain in one or both arms
- Nausea or vomiting
- Sweating
- Lightheadedness or dizziness
- Unusual fatigue
- Indigestion

These symptoms may be vague and not as noticeable as the crushing chest pain often associated with heart attacks as depicted as what many men experience. This might be because women tend to have blockages not only in their main arteries but also in the smaller ones that supply blood to the heart — a condition called small vessel heart disease or coronary microvascular disease.

Additionally, women tend to have symptoms more often when resting, or even when asleep, than they do in men. Emotional stress can play a role in triggering heart attack symptoms in women. Because women don’t always recognize their symptoms as those of a heart attack, they tend to show up in emergency rooms after heart damage has occurred. Also, because their symptoms often differ from men’s, women might be diagnosed less often with heart disease than men are.

If you have symptoms of a heart attack or think you’re having one, call for emergency medical help immediately.

Heart disease risk factors for women

Several traditional risk factors for coronary artery disease (such as high cholesterol, high blood pressure and obesity) affect both women and men. But other factors can play a bigger role in the development of heart disease in women. Some of these include:

- Diabetes. Women with diabetes are more likely to develop heart disease than are men with diabetes. Also, because diabetes can change the way you feel pain, you’re at greater risk of having a silent heart attack — without symptoms.
- Mental stress and depression. Stress and depression affect women’s hearts more than men’s. Depression makes it difficult to maintain a healthy lifestyle and follow recommended treatment.
- Smoking. Smoking is a greater risk factor for heart disease in women than it is in men.
• Secondhand smoke exposure. Secondhand smoke causes the exact same issues as being the primary smoker.

• Inactivity. A lack of physical activity is a major risk factor for heart disease. Some research has found women to be less active than men.

• Menopause. Low levels of estrogen after menopause pose a significant risk of developing disease in smaller blood vessels.

• Pregnancy complications. High blood pressure or diabetes during pregnancy can increase the mother's long-term risk of high blood pressure and diabetes. The conditions also make women more likely to get heart disease.

• Family history of early heart disease. This appears to be a greater risk factor in women than in men.

• Inflammatory diseases. Rheumatoid arthritis, lupus and others can increase the risk of heart disease in both men and women.

More research is needed; more women need to come forward and take charge of their health care as well. To learn more, please do your research.

THE TRUTH ABOUT STRESS

Believe it or not, sometimes stress can be good for you as it is a natural reaction. When you feel stressed, signals are firing to your hormones to help speed up your heart and breathing rate. Even before your mind kicks in, your body is preparing to handle the situation ahead. You may find that stress shows up when you need it most - while speaking in public or playing sports.

On the other hand, when stress lingers for too long, it can become unhealthy. A stressor that starts at work, if not managed in that environment, can sometimes follow one home. Over time, this unhealthy habit can have a more serious effect on our health. In some cases, sweaty palms and butterflies can quickly escalate to insomnia, anxiety, or depression.

Being aware of individual stressors and developing coping techniques to manage them takes time and practice. Small changes in diet and exercise routines can make a big difference. Taking time for ourselves and for others can give each of us an important perspective on what really matters.

If you feel stressed, healthcare experts advise taking a moment to steady your breathing, giving yourself a treat you can immediately feel such as going for a walk to soothe yourself, learn pressure point relaxation, learn to perform Reiki on yourself, listen to an inspirational song—treats do not always have to cost money. The key to resolving stress is to figure out what helps you as we are all different. To learn more, visit https://www.webmd.com/balance/stress-management/stress-management.

INCREASE YOUR NET WORTH

Recently, Bedford-Stuyvesant Restoration Corporation in partnership with Brooklyn Borough President Eric Adams, kicked off #BrooklynSaves, a borough-wide, free initiative to help residents in the borough begin a savings plan and increase their net worth. The campaign is a savings-matching program for individuals and their families, part of Restoration’s commitment to closing the racial wealth gap in Central Brooklyn and beyond.

Early participants in the free program will have an opportunity to earn a savings incentive of up to $60 through EARN’s SaverLife product, a financial inclusion tool which matches savings of $20 with $10 for up to six months. EARN is a national nonprofit that helps working families achieve prosperity through savings. They hope to enroll at least 1,000 people in Brooklyn alone.

The goal is to get every participant low- and middle income to accrue at least $400 in savings or up to two months of living expenses in the bank. A financial counselor also will be assigned to each participant in helping them consolidate their bills, reduce their debt, increase their FICO score and build emergency saving.

Brooklyn residents interested in building a savings habit and closing the racial wealth gap can enroll for one-on-one free financial coaching by visiting https://partner.saverlife.org/brooklynSaves. In addition to the savings match, savers will also have access to peer learning opportunities, webinars/seminars on important financial health topics, and a dedicated financial coaching team.
